Writing a Life Mission Statement
 by Patrick Morley

Submitted by Ozzie Osband & Joel Parker

Adapted from Second Wind for the Second Half (Zondervan Publishers, 1999)

How many of us can say, "I've been a fool. I've been living out a role that others have scripted for me, a role that doesn't celebrate or showcase my talents and gifts. This is not the real me."

Virtually every man reaches a point at which he realizes he has spent 10, 15, 20, or more years "playing a role" that he thought would make other people happy or get him where he wanted to go.

In this exercise I want to walk you through a "method" or "process" for making things more clear for the rest of the journey. The goal is to equip you to write or rewrite a "Life Mission Statement." It's a process by which you can clarify the new dream, cause, or task you've been thinking about. Generally, the areas to cover in a "Life Mission Statement" can include, but need not be limited to the following . .

- An Audit of "Your Life So Far"
- A Life Purpose - Why You Exist
- A Calling - What You Do
- A Vision - A Mental Picture of What You Want To Happen
- A Mission - How You Will Go About It

AN AUDIT OF "YOUR LIFE SO FAR"

In the space provided below I'm going to ask you to reflect on "your life so far." It's a sort of first half audit. Since writing makes a more precise person, it is doubly good to write this understanding on paper. You can write anything you want - as detailed or general as you wish. However, here are the types of things I would like you to reflect upon as you paint with words the portrait of your life so far . .

- Your overall satisfaction
- Milestones
- Major goals and dreams, met and unmet
- Significant achievements and satisfying results
- Priorities, right and wrong
- Failures, sins, regrets and lessons learned
- Fears, doubts, and pressures for the past, present, and future

Be balanced. Don't beat yourself up. Be humble, but don't sell yourself short. Use the 80-20 rule - 80% of the space for positive reflections and 20% for improvement areas. Use as much imagination as you want, or you can follow the flow of the guideline above. Okay, it's time to go to work. In the space provided below, assess the current situation of your life (use extra paper if you need more space).
